اختبار في مادة اللغة الأجنبية الأولى (إنجليزية)

جوان 2000

English people are very fond of nature and animals . Although the weather is often rainy , they love to take long walks in the countryside or in parks. They enjoy outdoor life .

One of their popular pastime is to spot animals in their natural environment . Nature-lovers can spend hours waiting in a wood to watch or to take photos of a rare bird. Many people build little bird-houses in their gardens for birds to shelter.

The English also like watching butterflies . They have special " butterfly farms " , sorts of zoos, where visitors can see lots of varieties of these insects.

Those who prefer wild animals have to be more patient if they want to spot a fox or a wolf, for instance .

One of the most interesting things nature-lovers can do as well while camping , is to sit outside their tents at night and look around and listen . When their eyes are accustomed to the dark , they can see the world come to life and hear noises .

6pts		1. Last Easter holidays, our school organised a trip to the Safari Park in Kenya. Once there, we toured the Park by bus. Our guide warned us to be cautious and not to open the windows because the animals are in freedom and can be dangerous. In spite of all the warnings, one of the boys opened a window. As he was trying to take photos, a gorilla rushed to the bus, snatched the camera and ran away. What a big fright we had!
		2- No, they are not. Possible ideas: - Throw litter everywhere (streets - pavements) - Pollute beaches - Do not respect forests: pick plants - cut down / burn trees - leave fire lit when camping - Kill animals - factories pour rubbish in the sea and rivers - Fumes in the air - pesticides in agriculture. Yes, they are. Accept any correct ideas. Considers: The layout* - The use of the past - Correctness of sentences (syntax) - Cohesion and coherence. * Introduction - body - Conclusion.
